

Steve Moore served as an FBI Special Agent and Supervisory Special Agent for 25 years, retiring in 2008. Steve's early career was spent in covert operations against the Aryan Nations in northern Idaho and the northwest. Later, he led the investigations of many high-profile crimes in LA, including the first ever conviction for an anthrax threat, the Buford Furrow shooting/murder spree at a Jewish Community Center and the interdiction of a planned attack on California's second-largest oil refinery. He spent several years on SWAT, was trained as a sniper, and served as the undercover agent on a critical espionage investigation. Steve was the case agent for the Los Angeles 9/11 investigation and later chosen to supervise all Al Qaeda investigations for the Los Angeles FBI.

In 2003, Steve stood up the FBI squad in charge of responding to acts of terrorism against the U.S. in Asia and Pakistan. The squad investigated (among other cases) the bombings of the U.S. Consulate in Karachi and the J.W. Marriot Hotel in Jakarta as well as other bombings throughout Asia. He established liaison and worked closely with the CIA and U.S. State Department in several countries, conducting investigations out of at least six U.S. embassies. Steve also ran the investigative component of the FBI Rapid Deployment Team in Crete tasked with response to potential terrorist attacks at the 2004 Athens Olympic Games. Steve also served as a term Assistant Legal Attaché at the U.S. Embassy in Nassau, Bahamas during the summer of 2004 and has lectured on violent crime and terrorism at the International Law Enforcement Academy in Bangkok.
